AWC Purpose Statement

The AWC of The Hague is an association formed to provide social and educational activities for American women living in the Netherlands and to promote amicable relations among people of all nations as well as acquiring funds for general public interest. The association does not endeavor to make a profit.
Message from the President
by Linda Divon

My two-year term as President of the American Women’s Club of The Hague will soon be coming to an end. I feel grateful for having had this wonderful opportunity of playing a major role in the Club and for being an integral part of the AWC, which is marking its 85th birthday this year.

The things that make this Club so special are twofold: reaching out to Newcomers to welcome and to support them, but also being an organization that is aware of the challenges facing our host country as well as the larger challenges and problems in our world today. We, of course, will not be able to solve all the world’s woes, but having this awareness, this caring and then actually doing something to make a difference through our fundraising projects and philanthropy – this is what makes the AWC stand above other clubs and other local women’s groups and organizations. It is this “reaching out” and helping others that makes our Club unique.

Our Hearts & Minds Gala in 2014, under the gifted, dedicated leadership of Jan de Vries and her talented team, successfully brought in almost € 60,000 and the proceeds went to three Dutch beneficiaries: Lighthouse Special Education, a school located in The Hague for international children with special needs; Laat Ze Maar Lachen (Let Them Laugh), a volunteer organization that provides outings for children who are not able to enjoy their childhood to the fullest due to poverty; and Hulphond Nederland, an organization that trains dogs to work with children with disabilities.

This year the AWC has continued with its annual fundraising Helping Handbag Auction with the proceeds going to the FAWCO Target Project: Free the Girls. With the generosity of our AWC Members, we raised an all-time high of € 3,000 (see page 22 for further details and photos).

Another important fundraising event for the AWC is its annual Holiday Bazaar. In addition to being a successful fundraising two-day event, it is a fun, high-energy event with unique items for sale, our famous AWC bake stall, wonderful raffle items and even our very own Santa Claus who gets us into the holiday spirit!

Leading up to the Sinterklaas holiday, there is the annual AWC gift bag workshop. Small toys, sweets and goodies are collected, packaged in holiday bags and delivered to 85 children ranging from babies to teenagers. The Morgenster Food Bank was our beneficiary last year and was also the recipient of our Food Drive Collections the year before. The AWC ladies are again hands-on in making a difference in the lives of those children from extremely poor backgrounds whose families rely heavily on this Food Bank.

In 2007, the AWC began the Heart Pillow Project, currently overseen by Eileen Baker. Over 1,000 pillow sets have been distributed to breast cancer patients at local hospitals: Bronovo, Leiden LUMC, MCH Antoniushove and MCH Westeinde.

April General Meeting
by Trena Cormier

Rather than feature a guest speaker, this month’s General Meeting will cover a variety of topics including an update on the recent FAWCO Conference in Rome and an update on the progress made by the Constitutional Committee in updating the AWC Constitution, By-Laws and Policies & Procedures.

We will also hold an important vote to elect Officers for the 2015-2016 AWC Executive Board (go to page 26 to meet the candidates). If you are a Regular Member and are unable to attend this meeting, please submit a proxy ballot, available by email from the Front Office prior to April 7.

After the conclusion of the Club business, we invite everyone to join us for a potluck. Please RSVP on GroupSpaces at www.groups.com/AWCTheHague/item/924485 and mention in the comments which dish you plan to bring (please plan on your dish serving around six to eight people).

Free babysitting will be available for children between six months and five years of age. In order to have the correct ratio of babysitters to children, you must book in advance. Call the Front Office at 070 350 6007 or email awcthehague@gmail.com before Tuesday, April 7 to reserve your place.

My 17-year-old’s decision on whether to go to university in the US or the UK has been a constant topic of discussion in my house for the past one and half years. You might recall reading in November 2014 that my family visited seven US universities in four states last April. We’ve also made five visits to the UK for university tours. Veronica decided to apply to just one school in the US: Northwestern University, outside of Chicago. Unlike America where there is no limit to how many applications you can submit as long as your parents are willing to pay the application fees, you can apply to only five universities in the UK. I’m sure you can imagine how proud her father James and I am that Veronica got offers from all six schools.

Luckily, Veronica has had someone besides her parents and the school counselor to talk with about this difficult decision: her mentor. For the past 15 months, Veronica has had weekly Skype calls with Beatrix from Sea Change Mentoring, which specializes in matching up third culture kids with mentors that were third culture kids themselves. While Beatrix’s parents are Spanish and French, she was born in Mexico City, raised in London and went to graduate school in Canada. Now living near Cancun, Mexico, Beatrix provides Veronica with a fresh perspective from someone who’s been there herself.

While waiting for Veronica’s decision – the biggest decision she’s faced in life thus far – I realized that no matter which country she chose, I’d have my reservations. If she opted to go to the US, I’d miss her terribly, knowing that I wouldn’t be able to pop over to see her in a school play or at parent’s week since, frankly, we’d be broke. Instead, if she chose the UK, I’d wonder if I’d pressured her with my pole dancing jokes to go the less expensive route and she would hold it against me if she ends up unhappy there. As much as I’ve told myself that this was her decision to make, I’ve always known that this decision was bigger than just her – it’s actually a decision that impacts our whole family.

After nearly constant debate of the American versus British systems, Veronica made a decision. Somehow I’d imagined her announcement would occur over an emotional family dinner. Instead, she sent me a Facebook Message: “I think I’ve decided to go to the UK for uni.” Although that might sound a tad noncommittal to an outsider, I immediately knew this was a big step for Veronica. Although I was disappointed by her choice of the method of delivering this bombshell, I am absolutely thrilled that she’ll be nearby. Her little sister Ashlynn is already looking forward to spending weekends visiting Veronica, which may sound sweet but I suspect that her real motive is going to university parties.

Although I had assumed that she would accept the offer from Northwestern without hesitation, I think Veronica even surprised herself when she realized that she wanted to stay closer to “home” and that home is no longer the US. The nasty Chicago winters and the requirement to take two more years of French also steered her towards the UK. She has narrowed her options down to two schools; ironically, neither looks anything like Cambridge or Hogwarts as they are both just 50 years old. Now she is comparing their curriculums and researching which offers the better options for studying for a year abroad in Australia.

It is ironic that I thought that the US was too far away and now not only does Veronica hope to study for one year in Australia, but Ashlynn is already investigating Australian campuses: “Look, Mama, this one has a private beach.” Guess you have to be careful what you wish for!

The doors we open and close each day decide the lives we live.

Visit to de Haagse Markt
De Haagse Markt (www.haagsemarkt.nl) is the biggest market in The Hague with 540 stalls filled with fresh vegetables, fruit, fish, meat and clothes. There are a lot of exotic products, including ingredients for Tex-Mex recipes. This large outdoor market is visited daily by tens of thousands of visitors and is a meeting place for many cultures. We will meet at the Starbucks at Den Haag Centraal Station (DHCS) and will travel together by Tram 6 to the entrance of the Haagse Markt. Please let us know if you will be meeting us at either Starbucks or the market when registering on GroupSpaces.com. There will be an option to join us for lunch (at own expense).

The April Daytime Book Group selection is "We Are All Completely Beside Ourselves" by Sherman Alexie. This 2015 novel is about the family of a boy with autism, and it touches on themes of family, love, and the human condition. The novel has received critical acclaim, with many readers praising its unique perspective and emotional depth.

After our enjoyment of "Unbroken", we turned again to history for another true tale of beating the odds during desperate times. Join us as we discover how nine working-class boys from the American West struggled to earn their way through school during the depths of the Depression and then showed the world at the 1936 Olympics in Berlin what true grit really meant.

Recap of the January – February Discussions

The Marriage Plot: This novel was inspired by the premise that modern life (specifically the availability of divorce) has removed the conflict that fueled many classic novels, such as those by Bronte and Austen, “for if a woman can just get divorced, who cares if she marries badly?” Fortunately, this novel does allow its young college graduates to aspire to more than wedded bliss as a life goal, albeit with some dead ends and twists in their first post-collegiate year. All-in-all a mixed review with some members loving the novel, declaring it “comic” and “an excellent representation of the intellectual hubris that can characterize college students,” and at least one member declaring she “pretty much hated all of it.”

The Middlesteins: Food can show love and be a tool of control. Food, by surfeit of quantity or lack of quality, can kill. The irony, of course, is while food is “a wonderful place to hide,” one’s abuse of food will, in time, come out in the open. This novel is about the family of obese and diabetic Eddie Middlestein, an intelligent wife, mother and lawyer who can’t stop eating…whatever…even though she and everyone around her knows she is killing herself. Despite this dire synopsis, this is a comic novel which captures current middle class America perfectly. The Americans among us felt right at home and the international members of our book club found the details of American life, e.g. a $20,000 b’nai mitzvah, fascinating. The book was enjoyable, but fell far short of genius. Edie, in particular, was not a well-developed character even though she is the nucleus around whom all the action rotates.

Book Club: Evening

The April Evening Book Group selection is "Tree of Smoke" by Denis Johnson. This 2007 novel won the US National Book Award for Fiction and was a finalist for the Pulitzer Prize. It tells the tale of a man named Skip Sands who joins the CIA in 1965 and becomes involved in the “Tree of Smoke” project in Vietnam. Find out for yourself why one reviewer in The Guardian said, “It’s a big, dirty, unmade bed of a book and, once you settle in, you’re in no hurry to get out.”

Chat, Crafts & Cake

Let’s get creative! The AWC will be open to all crafters. If you’ve been looking for an open space large enough to lay out that king-size quilt, or need more table space to organize your photo albums or scrapbooks, or just need an excuse to stitch, pack up those supplies and bring them to the Clubhouse so you can chat with fellow AWC Members and visitors while you work. You might even be able to pick up some suggestions from a fresh pair of eyes. Each week, a different Member will bring a cake made from a never-before-trying recipe for tasting and critiquing. We’re sorry, but babysitting is not available and thus we can’t accommodate children. Questions? Contact: Suzanne Dundas at awcthehague.crafts@gmail.com

Sign up on GroupSpaces.com to share dinner at home with AWC friends and spouses/partners. Rebecca Niles-Pourier will set the dates, place couples (or individuals) randomly, and assign the hostess. Then each hostess will set a theme and guests will be asked to prepare a dish. For example, if the theme is Italian, then one person might bring antipasto, one brings bread, one brings Italian wine, >> 16 etc. The hostess may choose to cook the main course or do it all, but then you might be asked to contribute some money towards the cost. It will be up to each hostess how they want to structure the meal. You may be asked to host one dinner for eight, six or four guests (depending on your space at home) and then you will be a guest at someone else’s home the next time. This is a fun way to share an evening with new AWC friends while enjoying a great dinner! Future dates include Saturday, June 20. Contact Rebecca at awcthehague.wwdp@gmail.com to join in the fun.

Heart Pillow Project
The AWC is in its 7th year of making heart-shaped pillows to support the arms of breast cancer patients in local hospitals. Each pillow is made with tender loving care, wrapped in a plastic bag tied with a beautiful bow and a message signed by a volunteer. No sewing skills are needed; just the ability to cut and stuff! What a wonderful way to meet new friends while contributing to a worthy cause. The emails we receive are so touching and show that women are linked everywhere to this terrible disease. We are proud to provide women with something not only practical, but comforting as well. If you can cut fabric, stuff fiberfill, thread a needle or tie a bow, we need you! No sign-up is necessary. “Perfect” Cocktail Contest
It’s time again to shake, stir and mix things up at the next AWC “Perfect” Cocktail Contest. The best way to start spring and summer is with a mouthwatering contest where we challenge each other to make the perfect cocktail (for ideas, see page 38). Let’s track down Holland’s best cocktail ingredients and create a selection of delicious concoctions from exotic to sophisticated – you be the judge! Non-alcoholic cocktails are also welcome. Include a note to let us know if you plan to enter the contest when you register at www.groupspaces.com/AWCTheHague/item/662906. We have decided to postpone the Partner Appreciation Event that was originally scheduled for April 18. Please check out the fun Quiz Night and Dinner now planned for that evening.

Visit to Keukenhof Castle and Keukenhof Gardens
Keukenhof Gardens is the most beautiful spring garden in the world! More than 7 million tulips, daffodils and hyacinths fill over 32 hectares with color and fragrance. The pavilions feature 30 alternating flower and plant shows. We will walk through the park and have lunch in one of the restaurants (at own expense). After lunch, we will walk through the gardens to Keukenhof Castle for a guided tour in English. This castle is the center of the historic estate Keukenhof, located in the heart of the flower bulb region. Its origins are connected to the success of the Dutch Golden Age’s Dutch East Indian Company (VOC) as it was constructed in 1642 by Adriaen Maertenszoon Block, a former Commander of VOC. In 2012 an extensive restoration was completed and today it again has the allure of a 17th century estate.

We will meet at Starbucks at Den Haag Centraal Station (DHCS) at 9 a.m. We’ll travel by train to Leiden Centraal (bring your OV-chipkaart), and then catch a special express bus to Keukenhof (this ticket will be purchased in conjunction with your Keukenhof Gardens entrance ticket). Please buy your ticket online in advance for the Keukenhof Gardens: www.keukenhof.com (unless you are driving, choose the € 23.50 Combi Ticket which includes the bus from Leiden). We will pay for the tour of Keukenhof Castle at the door (€ 12.50 for regular entry or € 3.50 with Museumkaart). Go to www.groupspaces.com/AWCTheHague/item/957101 to register.

In celebration of our Club’s 85th Anniversary, the American Women’s Club of The Hague and the FAWCO Committee have planned a delightfully entertaining evening at the Nieuwspoort in The Hague city center. Home to the Dutch Press Club (where members are known as Poorters), the recently renovated Nieuwspoort is nestled on the outside edge of the Binnenhof with the entrance just across from the American Book Center. Stylish and chic – and normally bustling with journalists, politicians, lobbyists, press attachés and the like – the AWC will have the run of the place on the evening of May 9!

American author and Steinway Artist Robin Meloy Goldsby will start the evening in the bar area with a charming program of solo piano music and stories from her two books: Piano Girl and Waltz of the Asparagus People. Demonstrating her “wicked sense of humor and keen eye for the absurd” (Publishers Weekly starred review), Goldsby “quicksteps from bumptious to bawdy to trenchant in this hilarious, truth-telling performance of her music and beautifully-written words” (Betsy Burton, Salt Lake City International Jazz Festival).

This fun evening would not be an AWC event, however, if we did not make it COUNT. Following Robin’s program, we will adjourn to a buffet dinner in a spacious room overlooking the Tweede Kamer, followed by a lively auction of just a few covetable items. Other high-quality items will be available as part of a silent auction throughout the night. Proceeds from the auctions will go to support some of the AWC’s most beloved charities. We aim to: sponsor a FAWCO Foundation Development Grant; partially fund the training of a puppy/future service dog with Hulphond Nederland; help Laat Ze Maar Lachen treat underprivileged children to relaxing and creative outings; and continue to support members of the international community in The Hague whose children have special education needs through Lighthouse Special Education.

Your ticket includes:
• Glass of Prosecco and bar snacks
• Performance by Steinway Artist Robin Meloy Goldsby
• Buffet dinner with two glasses of wine, coffee and tea (additional drinks are available for purchase)
• Live auction
• Silent auction

For tickets and information, please contact: AWC85th@gmail.com

Following the AWC Hearts & Minds Gala in June 2014, the AWC’s generous donation to Hulphond Nederland allowed us to sponsor an existing therapy dog, Whisley, and adopt a puppy. Hulphond asked us to submit four potential names, one of which would be chosen by the trainer when the AWC puppy arrived.

Originally we intended to draw from a hat four names submitted by the Membership, but the submissions were of such a high quality that a drawing seemed too random. So we formed a three-woman jury and scored the names. Ultimately, we submitted Yankee and Lincoln for boy names and Liberty and Troelie for girl names.

The AWC puppy, a Labrador retriever, was born on January 15. He is currently in socialization training with one of Hulphond’s best training families.

Well done AWC! These dogs really do make a difference in assisting people with a wide range of disabilities from behavioral therapy to PTSD to epilepsy as well as providing assistance for the physically disabled. Time will tell what valuable role Yankee will play in helping those truly in need. It will be fun to follow his progress with the updates promised by Hulphond.
The AWC has been hosting a Helping Handbag Auction to benefit FAWCO charities since 2009, and the results just keep getting better and better. Last year we raised an incredible €2,000 with this fun activity. This year was even better! In fact, fifty percent better! We raised an astounding €3,000 which will benefit the FAWCO Target Project charity Free the Girls, an organization dedicated to helping women and girls rescued from human trafficking by assisting them to start their own business and giving them support and training to make it a success.

The success of this event in no small part goes to the good-hearted volunteers who made it possible: co-auctioneers Johanna Dishongh and Loren Mealy, Jan de Vries, Sunita Menon, Laurie Martecchini, and to all those who donated items; encouraged others to donate items; cleaned, sorted and organized items; brought food; helped with set up; processed payments; and cleaned up. It is a gratifying thing to know that so many women in this Club are willing to help out where needed, when needed. Thank you all!

Helping Handbags Auction

Ladies of the American Women’s Club: Do You Know How Awesome You Are?

Following the February General Meeting, a good crowd stuck around for a delicious lunch provided by our volunteers as a lead-in to our Helping Handbag Auction. To make the afternoon even more festive, several corks were popped so that everyone could enjoy a glass (or two) of bubbly as we got down to business. Well, I say “business,” but let’s face it, this was just plain FUN. Under the stylishly gifted direction of co-auctioneers Johanna Dishongh and Loren Mealy, more than 65 items fell under the hammer with laughter, conviviality and general bonhomie in abundance. An even greater number of desirable items were available for direct purchase at our improvised “Boutique” in the Front Office with a minimum donation of €5.

We were fortunate to have some coveted high-value items, such as two gorgeous genuine Hermes scarves (won with some ruthless bidding by Linda Divon and Johanna). We were also very happy with the many nearly new, excellent quality brand-name items and equally with the maybe-not-as-good—but still good quality—knock-offs. From a real mink hat and scarf combo to several “vegan leather” items, everyone walked away with value for their donations. The atmosphere in the room was one of friendship and good spirited cheer. When everyone in the auction room assures you that a scarf is really a gorgeous color for you, how can you not keep bidding? As Georgia Regnault remarked as she went to pay for her six auction prizes, “This is so much more fun than just writing a check.” Her little granddaughters are certainly going to have a blast with their glamorous beaded bags to class up their dress-up box.

The WAC has been hosting a Helping Handbag Auction to benefit FAWCO charities since 2009, and the results just keep getting better and better. Last year we raised an incredible €2,000 with this fun activity. This year was even better! In fact, fifty percent better! We raised an astounding €3,000 which will benefit the FAWCO Target Project charity Free the Girls, an organization dedicated to helping women and girls rescued from human trafficking by assisting them to start their own business and giving them support and training to make it a success.

The success of this event in no small part goes to the good-hearted volunteers who made it possible: co-auctioneers Johanna and Loren, Jan de Vries, Sunita Menon, Laurie Martecchini, and to all those who donated items; encouraged others to donate items; cleaned, sorted and organized items; brought food; helped with set up; processed payments; and cleaned up. It is a gratifying thing to know that so many women in this Club are willing to help out where needed, when needed. Thank you all!
President – Becky Failor: Becky was born in Tucson. Her father was in the military so Becky experienced her first expat experience between the ages of nine months to four years in England. Her teenager and undergraduate college years were in the Detroit area. She and her husband Hugh have lived in Holland since August 2010. Becky worked as a Nuclear Chemist and she focused on safe working operations for 14 years for a US Department of Energy research laboratory. After several years of organizing tours for the AWC, Becky stepped into the position of Vice President in January 2015. She says, “The AWC has helped me integrate into Dutch life and enjoy living here. I’ve made many friends through the AWC. I would like to continue to be on the AWC Board to perpetuate the opportunities and support the AWC offers to a wide range of women and their families living in and around The Hague.”

Vice President – Sue Merrick: Sue grew up in Louisiana and graduated from Louisiana State University with a master’s degree in social work. While in graduate school, she met Bill and they married in 1982. Sue worked as a social worker until the birth of their first child, Alison, now 26. Two years later, their son Andy was born. Planning activities and working with volunteers are skills Sue has developed over the years through her varied experiences as a PTA president, newsletter editor, Girl Scout leader and youth group counselor. After her children left for college, Sue worked in several different jobs: a tutor in a Title X school, Interim Director of Children’s Ministries, and Interim Director of Youth Ministries. Before Bill’s job at Shell moved them to the Netherlands last summer, Sue had her own business as an independent educational consultant. She says, “The AWC has been a crucial factor in our quick and seamless adjustment to expat life! I am excited to be involved with an organization with such strong, fun and interesting women.”

April 2928 Going Dutch
Two hundred and thirty-three years ago, on the 19th of April, the United Provinces recognized the independence of the United States of America. On October 8 of that same year, the US and the United Provinces signed the Treaty of Amity and Commerce, the longest standing treaty to which the US is a party. Subsequently, the Dutch loaned a raggle-taggle nation the money to sustain the American Revolution. The diplomatic ties between the US and the Netherlands are the longest unbroken ties between the US and any nation.

Who we are and what we have become is deeply rooted in our Dutch heritage. John Adams, the second President and first American ambassador, lived in The Hague. In fact, the very first embassy our country ever owned was located at Fluwelen Burgwal 18 in a house he purchased and said was "suitable for a Hotel Des Etats-Unis." Now it is the site of a city parking garage.

More than a century earlier, the Pilgrims lived in Leiden for 11 years from 1609 to 1620 where they were granted religious and press freedom. It was from Leiden that they began their voyage to the vast continent they said "was fruitful and fit for habitation." On Thanksgiving, we still sing a Dutch hymn most people think is American: Wilt Heden Nu Treden (We Gather Together).

The sixth US President, John Quincy Adams, and his brother Charles Francis attended Leiden University “to pursue their studies of Latin and Greek under the excellent masters.” Presidents Martin Van Buren, Theodore Roosevelt and Franklin Delano Roosevelt directly traced their ancestry to the Provinces of Gelderland and Zeeland. The first language of President Martin Van Buren was Dutch. Other Americans who have shaped and continue to shape our nation with Dutch ancestry include: Walt Whitman, poet; Herman Melville, novelist; Thomas Alva Edison, inventor; Humphrey Bogart, Dick van Dyke, and Henry, Jane and Peter Fonda; actors; Bruce Springsteen, singer; Walter Cronkite, newscaster, Eleanor Roosevelt, human rights activist; Cecil B. DeMille, movie director, Dr. Benjamin Spock, pediatrician and author; Dr. Willem Kolff, creator of the artificial kidney, and the list goes on!

The Dutch who founded New York City stood against the wishes of its governor Peter Stuyvesant and demanded that people of all faiths be allowed to worship in their way. New York City today is a reflection of that early tolerance and inclusiveness. Furthermore, there are many American city names that were "Made in Holland": Flushing, Long Island comes from Vlissingen; Brooklyn from Breukelen; and Harlem from Haarlem. The town of Lewes, Delaware was founded by the Dutch and its Zwaanendael Museum, modeled after the city hall of Hoorn, observes Dutch-American Friendship Day each year.

To honor the contributions of the Dutch nation to our American heritage, the founders of OAR ~ Overseas Americans Remember submitted a resolution of Dutch-American Friendship on the occasion of the Bicentennial of Dutch-American Relations in 1982. The US Senate and House passed it as joint resolution HJ 410 and created a Day of Dutch-American Friendship. In 2006, on the 225th anniversary, OAR submitted an amended resolution and it was passed as HR 89 ensuring that Dutch-American Friendship Day would be ongoing and not merely a single day to honor the Bicentennial.

This year as every year, OAR will commemorate Dutch-American Friendship Day. Watch for further information in eNews, or email oarinnl@yahoo.com.

DFAS Art Lecture
The Sacred Art of Angkor
The Hindu temple complex of Angkor in Cambodia is the greatest archaeological site in Asia. Within an area of 155 square miles (400 square kilometers) there are dozens of temples, many covered in jungle, but the most important of them all is Angkor Wat. Built in the 12th century, Angkor Wat is the biggest religious monument in the world. This mystical temple is a recreation on Earth of the Hindu cosmos, brilliantly constructed to align with the sun and the moon and covered with exquisite carvings. Shakespeare for Kids & Teens
STET (Stichting The English Theatre) presents two Shakespeare productions aimed at children during the weekend of April 17 – 19. www.theenglishtheatre.nl
Twelfth Night: This is a great chance to introduce Shakespeare to your children over five. Infinite Jest, a London-based youth theater company, includes puppetry and song in this classic comedy.
Wherefore Art Thou?: To be or not to be? Do you choose to live your life or conform to what society thinks you should be? Why do adults seem to make the wrong choices without even thinking about it? Shakespeare asked all of these questions hundreds of years ago. This bustling contemporary performance for young adults is performed by Theatre of Engagement, an international youth company based in Holland. Using rap, spoken word poetry and live music, it asks about the choices young adults have in modern society.

Machtsdags in the Family
In honor of the 100th anniversary of the death of Hendrik Willem Mesdag, one of the most influential cultural-historical figures in The Hague’s history, various programs will take place throughout 2015. The highlight of the year will be a special exhibition through October 4 at the Panorama Mesdag featuring works owned by Mesdag’s descendants. This exhibit will feature works owned by Mesdag’s descendants recalling a special family history which is displayed with pride. Unique historical material from the extensive Panorama Mesdag archive will also be on display. www.panorama-mesdag.nl

EU Road Safety App
Curious about what the speed limit is on motorways outside of the Netherlands? You no longer need to spend time researching road traffic rules before setting off to explore Europe. The European Commission has compiled all important road safety rules in a handy app called “Going Abroad,” available on iTunes and Google Play. While reviews of the app state that it can be frustrating to navigate, the information is deemed helpful. You can also easily look up laws for any EU country on their website: www.europa.eu/!tu98pU
What Will They Think of Next?

A gray version of this unique church has been around the Netherlands for several years, but only recently became hot in neighboring Germany after a mention in a local newspaper caught the attention of national TV programmers, resulting in an appearance on a popular quiz show. Surprisingly realistic-looking, the inflatable church is 60 feet (18 meters) long, 25 feet (8 meters) wide, 40 feet (12 meters) high, weighs 1,750 pounds (800 kilos) and can accommodate groups of up to 150 people. It is transported by its owners Pim and Wessel Bottenberg on a wagon pulled by a trailer, and can be inflated within a couple of hours. It is used 80% of the time for festivals, discos, parties and weddings, with capacity for about 100 guests, as well as by Christian organizations who hire it to literally bring the church to the people. Should you have an interest in trying on a nearby road whose surface has been treated with a special non-adhesive layer of tempered glass (a type of safety glass that is given thermal or chemical treatment to increase its strength). A similar installation is being tried on a nearby road whose surface has been treated with a special non-adhesive coating. Moreover, the surface of the road “was built at a slight tilt to keep dust and dirt from accumulating and obscuring the solar cells.”

Solar-Celled Roads and Bike Paths

An idea coming out of a brainstorming session of researchers at TNO—the Netherlands Organization for Applied Science Research—in Delft is being tried out in the Amsterdam suburbs of Krommeeuw and Wommerveen. Its aim is to produce electricity via solar cells placed in a 230-foot (70-meter) long bike path, which is to be extended to 325 feet (100 meters) by 2016. Thus far, the installation has cost €3 million and has resulted in electricity for only three families—a lot of money for a small reward claim opponents of the plan. In response, Solar Energy Professor Wim Sinke points out that the plan is in a teething stage and that far greater results are in the realm of possibility such as producing electricity for street lighting, adding to the national electricity grid, or charging electric cars. The installation consists of rows of crystalline silicon solar cells that are embedded in concrete and covered with a translucent layer of tempered glass (a type of safety glass that is given thermal or chemical treatment to increase its strength). A similar installation is being tried on a nearby road whose surface has been treated with a special non-adhesive coating. Moreover, the surface of the road “was built at a slight tilt to keep dust and dirt from accumulating and obscuring the solar cells.”

As with many new experiments, the electricity generating bike path and roadway have met with a great deal of opposition and snide comments with regard to lack of hours of sunshine in this country, questions regarding keeping the cells comparatively free of dirt and damp and, in particular, the actual results from such high investments. Who knows—maybe 50 years from now electricity-producing roads and bike paths will be considered old hat.

Awarded Again

Near the Panorama Mesdag, on the corner of the Sophialaan and the Zeestraat, is the Carlton Ambassador Hotel, the home of the AWC Holiday Bazaar for the last five years. In 2013, it was voted Europe’s “Best Luxury Hotel.” At the end of last year, it was awarded the “Best World Luxury Hotel” in recognition of its new concept, Ambassador Residences and Suites aimed at business travelers giving guests a private entrance, their own working place and a private meeting room.

Finished at Last

This year marks the 100th anniversary of the death of The Hague painter Hendrik Willem Mesdag, one of the founders of The Hague School of painting. Among his most well-known works is the Panorama Mesdag, a 2,650 square foot (248 square meter) panoramic painting of Scheveningen Beach that he painted with his wife, Seintje, and three fellow Hague painters, Boch, Breitner and Blommers. In those days many European cities had similar cycloramas, only a few of which have survived. Mesdag was commissioned by a Belgian investment company for the 360° painting in 1880; when the company went bankrupt in 1886, Mesdag bought it and it has remained a public attraction up to the present day. A few years ago the painting suffered serious damage due to the construction of an adjacent parking garage. The 4-year restoration camixed with the recent replacement of the 25-foot (8-meter) high and 100-foot (31-meter) round protective velum or covering. The replacement of this “ceiling” called for a careful study to ensure that a number of vital requirements were met: the velum was fireproof; it would not become discolored; it would not let in too much green and red colors from the sunlight; and it must be protected against possible bacteria and fungi being brought in by the 125,000 yearly visitors. Weaving mill De Ploeg in Helmond was found able to provide the needed material, and a sewing atelier that specializes in making items for the theater followed the old pattern and produced the covering that brings the visitor into the 18th century atmosphere of the beach of the fishing village of Scheveningen.

If you’ve never been to see the Panorama Mesdag, located on the Zeestraat, you are missing out on a bit of Hague artistic history, as well as a look into the past. The building in which the Panorama is housed has also been renovated and now features a small gallery for modern paintings, sculptures and ceramics, as well as a cozy cafeteria, where you can recover from your trip through time with a coffee and a taartje (sweet). Once revived, you can walk around the corner and visit the Mesdag Museum on the Laan van Meerdervoort. This is the former patrician home of the painter and has many paintings, sculptures and ceramics that he and his wife collected. You also can visit the main family room which looks out over a charming garden with a view of the Peace Palace.
The Environment for (Grand-) Kids
by Anne van Oorschot and Kara Fairchild

As the Co-Chair of FAWCO’s Environment Task Force, I (Anne) try to get the message out about environmental issues as well as things each of us can do to become more aware and make positive changes. In time for Earth Day on April 22, we focused on helping the youngest among us develop a sense of environmental stewardship. This was beautifully handled by my co-chair Kara (who is a member of AWG Gothenburg in Sweden). I thought I would pass this great information on to all of you. My granddaughter Sophie is only five months old, so I will be tucking these ideas away for use later. After a bit of information on what you can expect from children at different ages, Kara has some great examples of simple experiments that will be as fun for parents/grandparents as they are for tiny tots! (Kara confessed to having far too much fun testing the experiments sans children!)

When the play is done, why not settle in to watch an interesting TED Talk with a link to an American fable: Jon Mooallem’s talk about a child’s eco-milestones in terms of recycling:

In order to show you what I mean, let’s look at a child’s eco-milestones in terms of recycling:

SEE: By age two, children should already be showing signs of concern for the natural environment and be aware that they should sort waste. Think about it. Two-year-olds love to sort and categorize. Plus, they observe everything. Then, they observe it all again.

 QUESTION: By age four, a child should have advanced to an understanding of why they need to protect the environment. He/she will openly question and will show open interest in answers. Visual representations of processes (like recycling) start to become enthralling. For example, a child will know why he/she needs to sort waste and will want to see how it is done. Believe it or not, he/she will also basically understand biodegradability. It should come as no surprise that it is all about WHY at that age.

RELATE: By the time a child is six years old, he/she should start to put it all into perspective and understand that people can make a choice to help the environment. Reinforcing ideas through learning, doing and sharing will be deeply rooted by age six. They understand that recycling is a choice that they can make in order to help the planet. By this age, they will also start trying to convince their peers and close family to recycle.

Let’s Experiment!
In keeping with this model, I am always on the lookout for great at-home experiments that help (grand-) parents. Here are three simple experiments that you can do at home with children in every age group. These eco-experiments are meant to introduce some basic themes of environmental stewardship in a way that is simple and fun for children.

Watch It Grow!
Materials: a transparent CD case, a couple of seeds and some soil
Process: Lay the CD case flat, put some soil on the bottom portion of the case, and gently plant a seed. Turn the case upright. You should be able to water the seed by pouring water into the side channel of the CD case. (Note: you may want to tape the CD case closed.)

Water Quality, Plant Life
Materials: 4 transparent A5 plastic folders with a top opening; 30-40 damp cotton balls; 4 labels; 1 tablespoon salt; 1 tablespoon sugar; 1 tablespoon vinegar; and 0.2 deciliters tap water.
Process: Create four “planting” folders with four different labels: acid, sweet, salt and control. Place some damp cotton balls into each folder and sprinkle with seeds. Divide the water into four separate cups. Add salt to one cup, sugar to one cup and vinegar to one cup. Keep one cup as the control (clean) water. Once the seeds have sprouted, gently water the seeds each day with the water type that matches that folder. Over time, you should see how the water quality impacts seed growth and survival.

How Do Plants Absorb Pollution?
Materials: 6 small Baby’s Breath stems with multiple flowers, 6 transparent containers, 0.3 deciliters tap water, and food coloring Process: Pour 0.5 deciliters water into each container. Mix food coloring into five of the containers. Keep the sixth container of water clear. Add one Baby’s Breath stem to each container. After a few days, the white flowers will start to change color.

Eco Milestones (Ages 0 – 6)
Not long ago, I (Kara) was tasked with outlining a child’s eco-milestones for a local website read by busy mothers. As someone who is passionate about bridging the gap between humans and the environment, relating a child’s natural development to how they view environmental stewardship was exciting. After I finished the article, I kept researching. I found models and complicated diagrams showing eco-milestones in children. I read thick sustainability books for educators. I embraced a left-brained approach to it all. Then, I threw it all into the recycling bin. It had to be simpler. I wanted to break eco-milestones down to the most basic model possible. What I came up with was: SEE – QUESTION – RELATE. It is so simple that most parents/grandparents say, “I can use that!”

In order to show you what I mean, let’s look at a child’s eco-milestones in terms of recycling:

SEE: By age two, children should already be showing signs of concern for the natural environment and be aware that they should sort waste. Think about it. Two-year-olds love to sort and categorize. Plus, they observe everything. Then, they observe it all again!

QUESTION: By age four, a child should have advanced to an understanding of why they need to protect the environment. He/she will openly question and will show open interest in answers. Visual representations of processes (like recycling) start to become enthralling. For example, a child will know why he/she needs to sort waste and will want to see how it is done. Believe it or not, he/she will also basically understand biodegradability. It should come as no surprise that it is all about WHY at that age.

RELATE: By the time a child is six years old, he/she should start to put it all into perspective and understand that people can make a choice to help the environment. Reinforcing ideas through learning, doing and sharing will be deeply rooted by age six. They understand that recycling is a choice that they can make in order to help the planet. By this age, they will also start trying to convince their peers and close family to recycle.

Let’s Experiment!
In keeping with this model, I am always on the lookout for great at-home experiments that help (grand-) parents. Here are three simple experiments that you can do at home with children in every age group. These eco-experiments are meant to introduce some basic themes of environmental stewardship in a way that is simple and fun for children.

Watch It Grow!
Materials: a transparent CD case, a couple of seeds and some soil
Process: Lay the CD case flat, put some soil on the bottom portion of the case, and gently plant a seed. Turn the case upright. You should be able to water the seed by pouring water into the side channel of the CD case. (Note: you may want to tape the CD case closed.)

Water Quality, Plant Life
Materials: 4 transparent A5 plastic folders with a top opening; 30-40 damp cotton balls; chia, bean sprout or watercress seeds; 4 labels; 1 tablespoon salt; 1 tablespoon sugar; 1 tablespoon vinegar; and 0.2 deciliters tap water.
Process: Create four “planting” folders with four different labels: acid, sweet, salt and control. Place some damp cotton balls into each folder and sprinkle with seeds. Divide the water into four separate cups. Add salt to one cup, sugar to one cup and vinegar to one cup. Keep one cup as the control (clean) water. Once the seeds have sprouted, gently water the seeds each day with the water type that matches that folder. Over time, you should see how the water quality impacts seed growth and survival.

House of Bols

by Mary Adams

Internet push marketing can be a danger to your wallet. You get pushed some coupons and before you know it, you are laying out the cash. Luckily, delicious things can happen... things that can “bol” you over. Lucas Bols established his distillery in Amsterdam in 1575, specializing in genever (Dutch gin) and liqueurs. The heart of a good genever is high-quality malt wine, a distillate of three different types of grain: wheat, rye and corn, that give genever that malty, corn spun taste.

In the 19th century, genever was one of only four accepted bases for cocktails worldwide. By 1880, genever was so popular that the import of genever to the US was six times larger than the import of other gins.

Bols has 300 old liqueur recipes in its (secret) archive. Many famous classic cocktails such as the Collins were originally made with genever and many more forgotten classics like the Holland House are now making a comeback in the world’s best bars... and that is why I clicked BUY when I saw an online coupon for a Cocktail Bartending Academy night at the House of Bols (www.houseofbols.com). My bar shelf contained so many full bottles of Bols liqueur that I was in the need of recipes, especially with summer approaching.

Guests were invited to take a self-guided tour of the facility before the academy started. There was a bit of enlightening history on bottle-making, distilling, etc. There was also a story of Rembrandt’s drinking debt in 1658 when his studio was across the street from Bols and he ran up quite a genever bill. To pay, he gave Bols a painting from one of his pupils, Hendrik Heerschap, which to this day still hangs in the House.

For KLM frequent flyers, the next room was breathtaking. It is the only place in the world exhibiting the complete series of Delft Blue miniature homes filled with genever. These have been made by Bols to be presented to KLM business class passengers since 1957. There are as many houses as the age of KLM (currently 89) and all numbers are still being produced and distributed.

The next part of the exhibition was the hall of senses. I think my favorite sensation was opening drawers filled with spices such as vanilla beans, dried orange peels, star anise, cloves and cinnamon. I enjoyed running my fingers through the malt, rye and corn combinations used to make malt wine. It is a real treat for the nose to smell the 36 different flavors of liqueurs and try to identify the ingredients. Some were much easier for me to identify than others. For example, butterscotch was a no-brainer, but oddly enough I confused vanilla with chocolate.

The next room had a case with Lucas Bols’ own herb book from 1644. I couldn’t read his writing, so his secrets remain safe. The tour ended at a neon bar with touchscreens on which you select a cocktail and the printed recipe spits out to be taken to a bartender. My choice was refreshing, but before we knew it, it was time to rock the bar. Jerry and I presented ourselves at the academy.

Our class of 25 was excited and eager to get behind the bar. It was rather like a cooking school with mirrors above so you could see demonstrations and complete bar setups. The instructor (a guy who looked about 15, but knew his stuff!) called us to the main bar and began the lesson. We were there to learn to make four cocktails using different techniques, from easy to difficult. He explained that this was a professional academy that taught people not only how to mix cocktails, but how to use beer taps, how to make coffees, and more importantly, bar etiquette with the customers. The place had a good atmosphere with bookshelves filled with vintage recipe books.

Our first cocktail was a Strawberry Cheese-cake on the rocks in a short glass with just three ingredients: lemon, yoghurt liqueur and strawberry liqueur. We all raced to our bar stations. Here is Jerry with the “Mexican elbow” squeezing the lemon juice over the ice. Next he added the Bols booze and voila, a delicious taste of fresh berries ready to enjoy.

Drink two was called a Swizzle, because of the way it is made with a special stirring stick. The Swizzle is in a tall glass with genever, kiwi liqueur and passionfruit. The first step was to “muddle” cane sugar with lime, which was de-veined to avoid a bitter taste. Then we got the “do not try this at home” speech unless you have the right barware. Apparently muddling can break ordinary glass. A proper muddle means you put your whole body into the motion for a few seconds – any longer than... that and you turn muddle to mush. Next, we gently scooped out the pulp of the passionfruit, added the Bols booze and churned the drink with the swizzle. It needs only a gentle twist because you do not want to break the passionfruit seeds. The taste was fruity and smooth.

The next concoction was a Dutch Cosmopolitan. I think Jerry really enjoyed making this one, as it involved a bit of flame-throwing at the end! We learned the proper way to shake a cocktail by tilting a metal shaker over the top of a tall glass rather than straight over the glass. If you do the latter, you create a vacuum and the metal shaker sticks like glue. No vigorous shaking, just a few strong-armed motions, and then tap the side of the shaker and it easily comes away from the glass. Pour it into the martini glass and then make a zest of orange, ignite it and then squeeze gently over the glass and a fine burst of tangy spray is introduced for flavor.

Our group was feeling quite jolly by this time, looking forward to the final challenge. The Boost was liqueur measured by eyeballing and using the swizzle stir stick to make perfect layers. The goal was clarity of lines: no murkiness, crossing over the lines or smudges. First was chocolate, then yoghurt liqueur and hot espresso on top. The idea is to slowly pour the liquid down the swizzle.

I do not plan on waving goodbye to my beloved Bombay Sapphire Gin, but I do plan on saying hello to a few bottles of Bols Genever and doing a swan dance behind the bar. If you are ever in the neighborhood, I’ll shake you up something interesting… Jerry might light it on fire or twizzle it with his special swizzle… Whatever the reason, if it was good enough for Rembrandt, it is good enough for me. Proost! Wonder what my next online coupon will be?

Art History Lectures:
Holland's Golden Age Revealed!
Intro to 17th Century Dutch Art
AWC Member Jane Choy will continue to share her expertise on art of the Dutch Golden Age by hosting this final art history lecture in the intimate living room setting of her 17th century home in the historic center of Voorburg. Parking is free in the neighborhood, although it is a blue zone with a two-hour limit. Her house is easily accessible by public transportation: Bus 23, 28, 45 or 46 and sprinter train from Den Haag Centraal Station.

The Golden Age was a period in Dutch history, roughly spanning the 17th century, in which the Dutch were a major world power and leaders in trade and science as well as art. The paintings produced by Dutch artists during this era are considered some of the greatest works of art in the world. These lectures will not only introduce you to the art of this dynamic period, but will also talk about the history and culture that brought this art to fruition, providing a deeper understanding of the country in which we now live.

Still Life and Architectural Painting: Objects of Desire!
These two specialties of Dutch 17th century art with their attention to the representation of different textures and illusionism are some of the most admired works of this period. Showing the originality of Dutch painters, we will also explore the symbolism and the ability of art to triumph over nature.

Indonesian Textiles
AWC Member Susan McKinley lived in Indonesia from 1993 – 1997, where she studied and collected Indonesian ikat weavings and batiks. She made special trips to see where textiles were created and purchased them at the source. In this lecture, she will share samples from her collection and discuss the techniques used to produce ikat and batik textiles. In some cases, she will reveal the meaning or story behind particular motifs in this tactile art form.

The variety is endless. Sumatran silks glowing and rich with scarlet reds and shining golds, and Sumbanese ikat with rusty reds and deep blues in bold patterns. Colorful rainbow stripes of Timorese ikat contrasts with the deeper browns, oranges and navy blue of the ikat of the islands of Alor, Flores and Savu. Every color can be found in the soft cotton batiks of Java: the bright colors of the north coast cloths, especially from Cirebon and Pekalongan, and the fine browns, whites and indigos of the court cloths of Solo and Yogyakarta. There are glorious Javanese silk batiks soft and floating, in glowing color and design. From Bali there is a veritable explosion of color and texture in both traditional and totally modern design.

Fees from this lecture will benefit the Stahili Foundation (www.stahilifoundation.org); the AWC was pleased to welcome a co-founder of Stahili as our guest speaker at the March General Meeting. This non-profit organization works to combat child labor and abuse in rural Kenya by striving to provide education and a safe, supportive environment in which the children can flourish.

Every donation to AWC Gala auctions makes a difference in our Club’s ability to raise money for children in need. At last year’s Hearts & Minds Gala, my husband and I were lucky to be the winning bidders on a two-night stay at a B&B in the Belgian Ardennes region.

Bed & Breakfast Le Lognard (www.herberglognard.nl) is a renovated farmhouse in the municipality of Vresse-sur-Semois, close to the French border. It is about a three and a half hour picturesque and relaxing drive from The Hague. We enjoyed the rolling hills and forest scenery. The small towns you pass through are full of “character.” The small villages that make up the Vresse-sur-Semois are no exception. Straddling the banks of the Semois River, they are picture postcard lovely.

We planned our visit over a cold January weekend. The Hague had just had the first snow of 2015, so we were not surprised to find snow upon our arrival. We were warmly welcomed by another guest at the B&B, John Proctor, who has long been a supporter of the AWC. John and his wife, Gerda, are friends of the B&B owners, Theo Meijer and Hanneke Engelsman, and agreed to help us settle in while the owners were running errands. This photo shows Theo with a painting John created of the B&B. Theo and Hanneke soon returned and made us feel right at home. Their recommendations for restaurants were great. Le Table, about a 15-minute drive away, served one of the best meals we’ve had in a long time. We could easily understand how they have been awarded the ZOOVER Award for the past four years (equivalent to the Oscars of the Dutch travel industry).

We chose De Droomkamer (Dream Room) for our stay. Our bed was comfortable and the free WiFi made using our private sitting area very pleasant. We were given a tour of the other rooms. Many are set up to be perfect for families, with several beds in a room. With the weather snowy and cold, we stayed indoors and relaxed. If you visit in warmer weather you will be spoiled for choice of things to do. There is a visitor’s center just a few blocks from the B&B to give you more options than you would have time to complete. There is a visitor’s center just a few blocks from the B&B to give you more options than you would have time to complete. You do not need to drive to have fun. You could stay around the B&B and make use of the pool, rent bikes, walk along the river, visit the art gallery, etc., all while making the B&B your home-away-from-home.

About an hour’s drive away is Bastogne and its excellent new World War II museum (www.bastognenewarmuseum.be). The story of the war and the Battle of the Bulge is told from the viewpoint of four people: a young boy, school teacher, German soldier and American soldier. Based on an American Travel Center’s Facebook post, we had planned to spend at least 90 minutes to visit the museum, but we were so taken by the stories and displays that we spent about 3 hours there. Through August 2016, there is a special exhibit called From Texas to Bastogne, Texas Aggies Go to War, which might be of special interest to many of our AWC Members. Even though it was icy, we climbed to the top of the Mardasson Monument built to honor the memory of the 76,890 American soldiers who were wounded or killed during the Battle of the Bulge.

We spent the last day of our long weekend in Luxembourg, for just a little taste of this compact treasure. We would like to thank Theo and Hanneke for their Gala donation that brought us to their B&B in this lovely part of Belgium.
My husband had always wanted to introduce me to Indonesia, his country of birth. He was forced to leave there after WWII and the subsequent Indonesian rebellion against Dutch rule that ended in the colony becoming an independent nation. Unfortunately, by the time we had the opportunity for him to “go back home” he was too ill to do so. After his death I lost interest in the idea – until I heard about the month-long Memory Trip to Indonesia that was being organized for the second time by Pelita. This is an organization established in 1947 by repatriated former colonials. Its objective was to secure help these people needed but were not receiving from the Dutch government, to deal with physical, emotional and social problems related to the past and to the present life in a new “homeland.” Today, the original repatriated community is greatly dwindled, but there are still many people whose families lived in the former colony and who themselves were born and lived there until the end of WWII, and who wanted to revisit their roots. I felt akin to them because of all I had come to know about Indonesia from my husband’s family and friends. Though I was very much the new girl on the block, I was welcomed into the tour group of 26 men and women.

Jakarta is the capital not only of the island of Java, but also of the entire country of Indonesia, an archipelago consisting of thousands of islands. In colonial times the city was known as Batavia; ironically, I am also from Batavia: the one in New York. I had always felt some kinship to Jakarta until I actually experienced it: in all aspects, the two cities are clearly worlds apart. Jakarta was our starting point for a trip across the island. Our first visit was to Menteng Pula, one of the seven Dutch cemeteries on Java. Here both Dutch and Allied military are buried, as could be seen in the chapel where the American flag was displayed alongside the Dutch and Indonesian flags. After a word of welcome, we walked along the neatly kept graves. Members of our group who had relatives buried here placed flowers on their graves; the rest of us scattered blossoms that had been given to us as we left the chapel. Next we visited a neighborhood of terraced houses in which women and children had been interned during WWII by the Japanese, forced to endure atrocious conditions of overcrowding and lack of facilities as well as cruel treatment. On a happier note, we later stopped for refreshments in a throw-back to colonial times at Restaurant Batavia, whose walls were decorated with movie posters and pictures of pre-war Hollywood movie stars.

I dubbed Jakarta “Motorcycle City” because of the large number of these vehicles that race through heavy traffic. Other impressions of the city included covered canals; small, dark workplaces; old buses; tall buildings; rows of food stalls; fields of trash; small desas (compounds) which were entered through an arch often decorated with flowers; metal roofs and rooftops full of aerials; jerry-built houses; and many, many mosques.

From the capital we headed east, passing through or staying in cities and towns with familiar names. In some of these, one of our group’s friends or family members had lived; in the neighborhood of another, a family had formerly spent vacations; in yet another town, one in the group had been imprisoned in the war years. In between the towns, the scenery displayed bright green terraced rice and tea fields, snow-topped mountains, active and sleeping volcanoes, canyons, waterfalls, dried-up streams, distant temple ruins. And everywhere were mosques of all ages, sizes and shapes, with their slender minarets from which issued the loud daily calls to prayer, as the population of Java is 97% Muslim. To my sorrow, I saw very few birds and only two black butterflies; apparently, due to the island’s dense population, habitats for birds and butterflies no longer exist.

We visited the 80-acre Bogor Botanical Gardens, which the grandfather of one of our fellow travelers had been instrumental in setting up. The purpose of the gardens had been to study plants that could be commercially profitable, such as tea and tobacco. The gardens and adjacent deer park made an attractive setting for the bordering Bogor Palace, one of the six presidential palaces in Indonesia.

En route to Bandung, we drove up misty mountain roads to reach the 1,200-foot (365-meter) high Puncak Pass, after crawling along crowded highways where sellers of food, newspapers, toys, etc. darted in and out peddling their wares, and a bevy of attractive girls tapped on car windows, striking sexy poses and making come-on gestures – but surprise! They weren’t really girls at all!

We stopped at a tea farm and factory where we followed the whole process of tea making. Nearby was a hot spring fed by an inactive volcano; the sulfur in the water painted the rocks and hillside blindingly white. By Pangandaran we climbed down (and back up again) 439 steps to reach a Naga village in the valley...

ley – the Nagas being an off-shoot of the major Muslim groups. The people there live without electricity and running water; they use a nearby stream, which also waters the adjoining rice fields. Fish, another staple, are grown in a special pool. In Pangandaran, we exchanged our bus for betjeks. These man-powered bike rickshaws came up the hotel’s drive in a column led by a man in police uniform, and formed a semi-circle. Each of us was invited to step into a vehicle. This would be our transportation for that day, as we traveled from market to small family workplaces where a variety of foods were produced: tempeh (fermented soy beans), tofu (bean curd combined with soy milk) and gulah java (coconut sugar).

Our next adventure was a four-hour ride in small motorboats through a bogggy area to reach the town of Cilicap. All was peaceful until we were coming into port and we were roughed up by waves from the Indian Ocean. Once on shore, we boarded our bus and headed for the Dieng Plateau at 6,800 feet (2,093 meters) above sea level and surrounded by terraced mountainsides on which are grown potatoes, tobacco and tea. Our destination was Wonosobo and the Kresna Hotel, where the parents of one of our group members had spent their honeymoon.

Semarang is a city with two distinct areas: the old colonial one with government buildings and sizeable houses, and a modern part with the ever-present large shopping arcade. It was Sunday and we came upon a Christian Church; I was impressed with the number of people, and particularly young ones, who poured out of it at the end of the service.

Near Magalang, we finally arrived at the place I had been particularly looking forward to seeing: Borobudur, the famous Buddhist stupas (temple) and UNESCO World Heritage Site dating back to the ninth century. It was one of the treasures of Indonesia my husband had studied and especially admired.

While most of our group climbed the stairs to the top to take in the view (there was no access to the inside), I remained on the first platform. There I became the center of attention for groups of young students who politely asked if they could take a photo of me, which led to an avalanche of selfies with individuals and whole classes. The students had lists of questions written in English: What is your name? Where do you come from? How do you like this country? They were all studying English at school. Formerly, Dutch was the language in the schools, but since independence, this has been replaced by English – to the disappointment of many in our group.

Near Borobudur are the Powdan and the Mendut Temples. They firmly stand on square bases with steep steps leading to a small upper room. Outer walls are carved with Buddhas, disciples, animals and vegetation. In the evening we attended a lively open-air theater performance of the Ramayan Ballet featuring masked dancers with wild monkeys, especially entertaining as they descended from the ceiling and frolicked about the stage.

In Yogyakarta the main attraction is the Sultan’s Palace (kraton), parts of which are open to the public. The first place one comes to is a large outdoor covered platform where guests are received and entertainment takes place, such as a gamelan orchestra: gongs, metal and stringed instruments, and bamboo flute accompanied by traditional dancing and/or singing. Following this outdoor platform is a succession of rooms devoted to specific subjects: uniforms, weapons, gifts, etc.

This is in sharp contrast to the nearby Mangkunegaran Palace, where Raden Mas Said signed a treaty in 1757 with the Dutch East India Company and thereby formed a small hereditary duchy. This palace looks forlorn and somewhat dilapidated on the outside, but is most attractive on the inside. The family still lives in a private part of the house, while the public areas remain decorated with family portraits and photos.

We also visited several Hindu temples dating back to pre-Islam days. All were highly decorated with various symbols depending on their themes, including life before birth and sex education as well as various deities and legends.

In a morning dedicated to nature, we took a steep road up the western side of Mount Lawu to view the 300-foot (90-meter) high Tawangmangu Waterfall. It was here that a brother and sister among our group often visited with their grandmother to play in the stream below or on the huge rocks which form a perfect place to sit in the sun. Here, too, we met up with a school class and were asked to pose with them for a series of photos.

At last we reached Surabaya, my husband’s hometown. I don’t know where he... lived or went to school, but I experienced an atmosphere that I’m sure has not changed over the many years since his youth. The moist heat slows your pace and takes away your energy, and I imagined how he must have felt when disembarking from the ship that brought him to Holland in the beginning of a cold winter. In this city, too, we visited the cemetery where relatives of some of our group were buried. Then we enjoyed a rijsttafel with a group of people who, when forced to make the choice after Indonesian independence in 1949 of retaining their Dutch nationality and thus having Indonesian to repatriate to the Netherlands, or remaining in Indonesia and thus having Indonesian nationality, had opted for the latter. They had formed a club that meets regularly for social events. In addition to the delicious food, there was music, singing and dancing, and a grand time was had by all. We met several of them again that evening at our final dinner, which was organized by local Wieteke van Dort, the best friend of one of our group’s members. Wieteke has created a well-known character, Tante Lien, who sings and talks about various everyday topics and events in a combination of Dutch and Petjok, a vernacular spoken by “Indos” (Dutch people who were born and/or lived in Indonesia in the colonial period). This is always greeted with loving laughter. Wieteke also performed once a week throughout the trip in the dining rooms of the hotels in which we were staying, sometimes attracting Dutch tourists from other groups, who had enjoyed her performances back in Holland. It was a fitting ending to our nostalgic journey through space and time.

Last Thoughts: The biggest difficulty I had on the trip was getting to grips with the Indonesian currency, with its exchange rate of 10,000 rupiahs to $ 0.08. A massage cost 420,000 rupiahs; a batik blouse 50,000 (and try to get a large size in this land of small people); a gun and tonic 60,000; and black coffee 25,000. We all walked around with wads of bills and our guide was kind enough to print out a miniature set of bills so that we could identify them by color. When he needed to collect money for entrance fees, he would merely say, “Give me two reds,” or “one blue and a green.”

On the other hand, I loved the old, yet modernized, hotels. They exuded the colonial atmosphere; they were like museums with their statues, carved wood decorations, paintings and the like. They were also of historical significance. Hotel Majapahit in Surabaya was opened in 1911 as the Oranje Hotel; guests at its opening included Charlie Chaplin, Paulette Goddard and the writer Joseph Conrad. The Japanese army took it over in 1942, Dutch forces occupied it in 1945, and it was the scene of a riot when local Indonesians rushed in and tore the Dutch flag from the roof. It contains a two-story presidential suite and is the recipient of numerous tourism awards. The inner courtyard is ideal for reading or taking a nap.

The Gingerbread House Workshop is yet another way of reaching out to our host country by baking and decorating gingerbread houses and delivering them in time for Christmas to children’s and retirement homes and to Bronovo Hospital. With this initiative, the AWC ladies bring a smile and some joy to those needing some holiday cheer.

As Easter is approaching, we will once again be having our Easter Basket workshop on March 31. We are still looking for donations and volunteers to help create these lovely baskets. Our beneficiaries this year will be the Vliet en Burgh (Salvation Army) foster home in Voorburg and the Women’s and Children’s Crisis Center in The Hague. By giving a bit of your time, we will be able to continue with this tradition.

A special thank you to Sunita Menon, with her deep conviction and dedication as the Philanthropy Chair, she has done a tremendous job. All the fundraising and charitable events are made possible thanks to the resourceful and creative ladies of the AWC. Our Club is a small but great organization with a big heart!

Thank you to all the Membership for initiating new projects and activities. We now have more activities on offer for our working Members. There is an Evening Book Club and from time-to-time a Businesswomen’s Meeting Evening. Thanks to Greetje Engelsman, there is a Dutch Conversation group and coffee morning at the Clubhouse.
